PATENT HAND WEEDER.

This new and valuable labor saving implement is now offered to the public, with the most confident assurance that, as an effective weeder, it leaves nothing for the agricultural mind or forlet to desire. That we do not overstate its merits the cuts will appear from the following testimonial from a recent letter of Peter Henderson, the well known seed-man and florist, of Jersey City. He thinks it decidedly the best thing, save perhaps hand in the way of a weeder. My old fashioned one has done me good service for years on all the beds of my vegetable department, though strongly pe fected against all comers, it says, "it will save at least 50 per cent of any labor in weeding. I think it will do even better than that, and for any hand hoeing, such as beets, turnips, onions, parsnips or carrots, it is simply invaluable. Every farmer will find the same to be true, and every one who has a garden should have one. For sale by all dealers in agricultural implements, and by the manufacturers.

REMOVING THE CAPITOL.

With the recurrence of the annual season for May moving, the Capitol transportation mania has broken out at the West with unusual violence, and a fresh determination is evinced to hurry up the Star of Empire on its occidental pilgrimage. The telegraph brings the startling information that Reavis, the Removerer, has already flanked the District of Columbia, and is now in New York enlisting recruits, and we presume, contracting for pontoons for the safe conveyance of the files of the Globe across the Potomac river.

The critical position of the seat of Government in 1861, has lately presented itself in vivid colors to the Western mind; and haunted by nightmare visions of rebel masked batteries, and blockaded water communications, these migratory scions of New England would mount the Capitol on wheels and keep it oscillating between St. Louis and Cincinnati. Reavis is on the war path, and evidently means business. Something must be done! The compulsory acceptance of plethoric allowances of mileage, is an outrage too grievous to be longer borne by the delegates of these hardy pioneers; and the non-liability of the P. O. Department for missing packages of soiled Congressional linen under the franking act, takes, so to speak, the very starch out of statesmanship, and calls loudly for redress.

The dangers threatening the present location are imminent. Already New England encroachments have tampered with the genial flow of spirits; silencing the sweet music of the gurgling lager and the silvery clinking of the savory julep, which erst were wont to wake convivial echoes through the marble vaults. And with the firm sure tread of fate the genius of prohibition is striding from the East, threatening with unrelenting purpose to cut off the last tap of bibulous inspiration. Greeley is also in the saddle, and in the piping tones which once yelled, "On to Richmond" he now shouts aloud the claims of Shackerville. The Capitol, he holds should, be where in trying times a loyal populace could be counted on to rally by thousands to its defense, as the orderly masses of New York rallied to the support of the Draft officials in July, 1863. He desires the seat of Government where the intelligent influences of the classic Sixth Ward may impart a Grecian eloquence to debate, and the favorite pastime of tossing people from third story windows may be utilized in the case of recalcitrant protectionists, to the great simplification of the Speaker's duties, and the retrenchment of the salary of Sergeant-at-Arms!

With the Capitol at New York and Executive headquarters established in the Tribune buildings, H. G. could devote the time now wasted in midnight journeys to Washington to enlightening the President upon the intimate relation of universal amnesty to the protection of steel, rails, or to cheering his pensive hours with lively readings from the Tribune's poetical works on Political Economy, or, "What I know about Farming."

Plainly there is trouble brewing. When Greeley meets Reavis who shall foretell the issue of the fray of war? In the meantime the lobby will be in an agony of suspense, as to the propriety of securing apartments for next session in St. Louis or New York.

We advise Reavis to retire to the bosom of his anxious family, and H. G. to resume the preparation of his contributions to the light literature of the period.

THE E. & P. RAILROAD.

At the session of the City Council last evening, as reported in another column, warrants were duly signed by the proper officers, calling the Ward Meetings of the legal voters of this city to be held on Thursday, May 26th, to vote upon the question of accepting the Act enabling the City of Bangor to extend further aid to the Bangor & Piscataquis Railroad. As this question has been pending for some time, and has elicited considerable discussion, it is satisfactory to know that the matter is to be referred for decision to the qualified voters of the city.

ON REMOVING THE CAPITOL.

Reavis the Capitol remover is in New York endeavoring to raise a delegation to attend a National Convention on the subject, in Cincinnati next fall. The Tribune yesterday published an editorial from Mr. Greeley on the question of advocating the appointment of a commission by the President to survey the whole field and report what action would most conduce to the National well being. He says if the American people prefer a different location for their Capitol, it is high time that the facts were ascertained and reported.

The bill which recently passed Congress appropriating $2500 out of the funds belonging to the Kiowa Indians to Helen and Robert Lincoln, captured by that tribe some years ago, became a law on Monday, without the President's signature.

Six men, mostly convicted of petty larceny, were whipped by Sheriff Jacob Bensinger, in the jail yard at New Castle, Delaware, on Saturday. One of them has been punished in the same manner before.

EXCELSIOR STREET.

Mrs. STANTON'S LECTURE. Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton delivered a lecture on the Mrs. McFarland case to women exclusively, in Apollo Hall, New York, Tuesday morning, which was attended by a large audience, numbering considerably over one thousand of all including some of the most prominent and widely known women of the city and country, among whom were Miss Catherine E. Beecher, Mrs. Celia Burleigh, Mrs. Jennie June (Croly,) Miss Robert Dale Owen, Miss Tracy Cutler, Eleanor Kirk and Phebe Cozzens. Susan B. Anthony presided, and during Mrs. Stanton, who spoke for nearly an hour, giving a full statement of her views on the marriage relation, and then its application to the McFarland case. Mrs. Stanton urged suffrage as woman's only true and efficient relief for the unequal burdens she bears in the married state. She expressed her opinion of the course of Mr. and Mrs. Richardson, in whose virtue and innocence she declared full faith, and advocating sending McFarland to an insane asylum.

PARLIAMENT. In the House of Lords Monday night Lord Strathedon introduced a bill rendering education compulsory, and providing a rate for the support of schools. Action was postponed.

The House of Commons in Committee of the Whole discussed the Irish Land Bill clause, providing for advances to tenants, which gave rise to a lively debate. Mr. Gladstone believed that it would create confidence in Ireland, and that the government would be amply able to control and recover any advances made. Gathorne Hardy considered this principle of the clause as socialistic, and believed that its practical effect would be to multiply small holdings. Messrs. Fortescue and Potter supported the clause, and it was sustained by a majority of 68. The government resisted any other attempts to amend the bill. The House then came out of the committee and took up the Army Enlistment bill, which was opposed because it shortened the term of service to 8 years to facilitate recruiting. Mr. Cadwell showed that the object was to form an army of reserve by abridging the term of enlistment. After a long debate the bill was read a second time.

ACCIDENT ON THE ELEVATED RAILWAY. An accident occurred on Monday morning at the intersection of Greenwich and Houston Sts., New York. A passenger car in which were Charles Harvey, chief engineer; C. G. Springle, 1st assistant engineer; Dr. Charles Underhill; S. W. Cummings, and five machinists; and a freight car with 18 tons of pig iron; were being drawn at the rate of about 18 miles an hour, and on approaching Houston St., where there is a sharp curve in the track, the rear wheels of the freight car slipped off the rail, and the car was precipitated into Greenwich St., a fall of some 15 feet, dragging with it the passenger car, with all its passengers. All escaped unhurt, except Frank McKenna, the track-master, whose ankle was crushed, and Thomas Flynn and Peter Morrell, who were slightly bruised. The entire span of the track over Houston St. was destroyed, and the cars were badly damaged. A truck which was passing in the street at the time, was demolished, but the driver and horse escaped injury. This was the trial trip, and augurs unfavorably for the popularity of the Road. The accident was caused by a flaw in one of the connecting rods of the truck. McKenna still lies in a very critical condition.

The Theodrick Fund Dinner was given at St. James Hall, London, Monday evening. The Prince of Wales presided, and among the distinguished guests were the Duke of Sutherland, Lord Lenox, Nawaub of Bengal, and others. It was understood that Chas. Dickens was to be the orator of the evening, but he was obliged to disappoint. The Prince of Wales, in his speech, paid a high tribute to the theatrical profession, and closed by urging the claims of the charitable object of the meeting. John Baldwin, Buckstone and Dion Boucicault followed with humorous speeches.

The entire business part of Henderson, N. C., was destroyed by fire Tuesday morning. The fire was discovered in a store on Main St. It spread very rapidly, and soon consumed every building on both sides of the street for 200 yards. Many business houses in the town was destroyed. The fire is believed to have been the work of an incendiary. The loss is roughly estimated at $50,000, only a small portion of which is insured.

The Living Machine.

Behind the main spring of a watch and many portions of the work of the clock. The human stomach is to the human system what that elastic piece of metal is to a clock-spring. It influences the the action of the other organs, and controls, to a certain extent, the whole living machine. The comparison may be carried further: for as the weakness or other imperfections of the main spring is indicated on the face of the timepiece, so also is the weakness or other disorders of the stomach betrayed by the tinge of the face. The most common indication of disorder in the eyes are dullness in texture and listelessness mixed there is a worn, sickly expression in the whole countenance which, if the party so written upon does not realize that the great source of his or her trouble and sickness is to be found in the stomach, and that, unless the office which it performs in the digestion of the food, and the nourishment of the system, is not performing its duty. It requires a renewing and regulating, and no compound has ever been found to do this so perfectly as Hostetter's Stomach Bitters can truly said to be the one thing needful. The broken mainspring of a watch may be replaced by a new one, but the stomach can only be invigorated and strengthened, but this is one of the results of the famous tonic and regulating, which for eighteen years has been making a powerful cure with dyspepsia in all its forms. As a specific for indigestion it stands unrivaled. When the resources of the pharmacopœia have failed, when all else has proved worse than useless, when the complaint, a cause of this or that symptom, has baffled the skill of the physician, and those the gentlemen who have fought the Pisicataquis Road from first to last—and most of whom have opposed all City aid to railroads—are warm in favor of giving the necessary aid. The amount asked is such a sum as the Mayor and Aldermen may decide to be necessary; not in any event to exceed one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars.

EXCELSIOR STREET.

Mrs. STANTON'S LECTURE. Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton delivered a lecture on the Mrs. McFarland case to women exclusively, in Apollo Hall, New York, Tuesday morning, which was attended by a large audience, numbering considerably over one thousand of all including some of the most prominent and widely known women of the city and country, among whom were Miss Catherine E. Beecher, Mrs. Celia Burleigh, Mrs. Jennie June (Croly,) Miss Robert Dale Owen, Miss Tracy Cutler, Eleanor Kirk and Phebe Cozzens. Susan B. Anthony presided, and during Mrs. Stanton, who spoke for nearly an hour, giving a full statement of her views on the marriage relation, and then its application to the McFarland case. Mrs. Stanton urged suffrage as woman's only true and efficient relief for the unequal burdens she bears in the married state. She expressed her opinion of the course of Mr. and Mrs. Richardson, in whose virtue and innocence she declared full faith, and advocating sending McFarland to an insane asylum.

PARLIAMENT. In the House of Lords Monday night Lord Strathedon introduced a bill rendering education compulsory, and providing a rate for the support of schools. Action was postponed.

The House of Commons in Committee of the Whole discussed the Irish Land Bill clause, providing for advances to tenants, which gave rise to a lively debate. Mr. Gladstone believed that it would create confidence in Ireland, and that the government would be amply able to control and recover any advances made. Gathorne Hardy considered this principle of the clause as socialistic, and believed that its practical effect would be to multiply small holdings. Messrs. Fortescue and Potter supported the clause, and it was sustained by a majority of 68. The government resisted any other attempts to amend the bill. The House then came out of the committee and took up the Army Enlistment bill, which was opposed because it shortened the term of service to 8 years to facilitate recruiting. Mr. Cadwell showed that the object was to form an army of reserve by abridging the term of enlistment. After a long debate the bill was read a second time.

ACCIDENT ON THE ELEVATED RAILWAY. An accident occurred on Monday morning at the intersection of Greenwich and Houston Sts., New York. A passenger car in which were Charles Harvey, chief engineer; C. G. Springle, 1st assistant engineer; Dr. Charles Underhill; S. W. Cummings, and five machinists; and a freight car with 18 tons of pig iron; were being drawn at the rate of about 18 miles an hour, and on approaching Houston St., where there is a sharp curve in the track, the rear wheels of the freight car slipped off the rail, and the car was precipitated into Greenwich St., a fall of some 15 feet, dragging with it the passenger car, with all its passengers. All escaped unhurt, except Frank McKenna, the track-master, whose ankle was crushed, and Thomas Flynn and Peter Morrell, who were slightly bruised. The entire span of the track over Houston St. was destroyed, and the cars were badly damaged. A truck which was passing in the street at the time, was demolished, but the driver and horse escaped injury. This was the trial trip, and augurs unfavorably for the popularity of the Road. The accident was caused by a flaw in one of the connecting rods of the truck. McKenna still lies in a very critical condition.

The Theodrick Fund Dinner was given at St. James Hall, London, Monday, evening. The Prince of Wales presided, and among the distinguished guests were the Duke of Sutherland, Lord Lenox, Nawaub of Bengal, and others. It was understood that Chas. Dickens was to be the orator of the evening, but he was obliged to disappoint. The Prince of Wales, in his speech, paid a high tribute to the theatrical profession, and closed by urging the claims of the charitable object of the meeting. John Baldwin, Buckstone and Dion Boucicault followed with humorous speeches.

The entire business part of Henderson, N. C., was destroyed by fire Tuesday morning. The fire was discovered in a store on Main St. It spread very rapidly, and soon consumed every building on both sides of the street for 200 yards. Many business houses in the town was destroyed. The fire is believed to have been the work of an incendiary. The loss is roughly estimated at $50,000, only a small portion of which is insured.

Senator announced himself a Republican, and a stranger might have supposed he was listening to a Democratic speech, and a very bitter one at that.

After considerable discussion the Senate went into executive session, and then adjourned.

HOUSE.

Mr. Wood, of New York, addressed the House on the bill to revive American Commerce and Shipping; correcting what he characterized as a popular error, viz: that the foreign commerce of the United States was on the decline. It was not the foreign commerce of the United States that was declining; it was the navigation interests of the United States that were on the decline. The mistake was to confound commerce with navigation so far as foreign commerce was concerned, as shown by the value of imports and exports, and by their relative proportions. It was in a safe, sound and satisfactory condition.

What were the causes that led to the decline of American tonnage? The common idea was that it was attributable to the depredations of the Alabama. He admitted that it had some influence, but not to the extent generally supposed. He assigned several general operating causes for it. The first was the substitution of steamers for sailing vessels and iron for wood; the second was economy in the reduction of tonnage in consequence of the substitution of steam for sail—one steamer being able to do the work of three sailing vessels; the third was the over production of ships from 1848 to 1860, stimulated by the discovery of gold in California, and the trade to which it gave rise; fourth, was the influence of the navigation laws in which respect the United States are behind all other Nations, in the policy of refusing American registers to foreign built vessels. French steamers were bought in England and so were Austrian vessels, and so were the steamers of the Hamburg and Bremen lines; but the navigation laws of the United States founded on a Chinese policy of exclusion; stood at the threshhold of American harbors and shut out foreign built vessels from entering under the American flag.

Mr. Lynch inquired whether the commercial marine of England and the United States had not attained their highest point of prosperity under the very laws the gentleman was now condemning?

Mr. Wood, of New York, replied in the negative, and said that the gentleman's own report answered his question.

The fifth cause of the decay of American tonnage was the transfer of American vessels to foreign owners during the late War.—These transfers amounted to 833,893 tons—nearly one quarter of the aggregate tonnage of the United States. The sixth cause was the depredations of privateers during the war, but the loss by that means did not exceed 100,000 tons. While he would hold England to a just responsibility in that matter, he would not over-estimate or magnify the actual loss to our tonnage. He hoped to live to see the day when England would be compelled not only to make reparation but restitution for the wrongs. The seventh cause was the appreciation of the cost of labor and material, and heavy taxation was causing a large difference in the cost of building of sailing ships.

Mr. Wood then argued against the bill as entirely inadequate and ineffectual for the removal of the difficulties which it sought to remedy. It might palliate or temporarily stimulate but that was all. The true remedies were to be found in a very general revival of trade, founded on a sound basis, with specie payment and currency; the abolition of internal taxes, and greater public and private economy; in new avenues of foreign commerce; in the re-admission of American registry of American vessels which sought the protection of foreign flags during the war; in the modification of the navigation laws so as to admit foreign built vessels to American registry, either free of duty or on payment thereof.

Mr. Washburn, of Wisconsin, followed in support of the Committee, after which the bill went over till to-morrow, Mr. Lynch, of Me., giving notice that he would ask for a vote on the bill on Thursday.

Mr. Julian of Ind. asked leave to present two petitions against Stephen J. Field, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the U. S., and Ogden Hoffman, Judge de facto of the U. S. for the district of California, and praying that articles of impeachment be presented against them.

And I stoop to feel the ringlets

Wrap my heart up in her shroud

"COMPASSES."

From the Overland Monthly.

Aunt Clopsy was tossing her last flapjack from pan to plate just in time to give a glance that caromed around the room and pocketing itself in the open window, fell upon the four of us—Fosco, Brickham, the Colonel, and myself—riding toward the house, our horses tired and dejected, and ourselves discouraged and silent.

One would think almost as soon of building a hotel in a cemetery, and waiting for ghostly visitants, as of settling near Mud Springs, in the heart of a deserted country. But there the house stood—a straggling, one-storied inn, half adobe and half rough posts, like a broken spider, the supports of the shed standing like gaunt legs. One almost expected to see it moving about the place.

A wild, uncouth place—a rugged, unshorn bit of Nature, in her most discordant mood. A narrow valley, fringed, as to its sides, with gnarled oaks that crouched in silence, and cotton-woods, whose leaves seemed glad to be hidden by their dusty coatings. Large boulders lay strewn across the hills, or gathered in sober groups around a stony chaos, some gray and smirched with brittle moss, others broken, and trying to glisten in the sun. Even the birds deserted the canon at the foot of which the house stood; and, though sometimes peeping around the butte, never ventured in. How the winter wind snarled up the raving bullying everything, and drawing a cloud of dust in its jerky train! How the rain poured down, as if God Himself were the mighty hydraulic, spilling and sinking, ruining new channels, and following out the old ones. Only the little, thread-like brook, that twisted down from the spring, laughed in the sunlight, flashing back upon the cliffs and weeds that contrasted to the bright bubbles of their rapid course. At the fence the brook crept under, and moistened the flowers and vegetables that were scattered about the gardens—the pride and care of Aunt Clopsy, and the solace of her heart.

Herding all day among the hills, wearied with aimless sport, we came unexpectedly upon these signs of life, and, urging our horses, pushed on to the dwelling.

"Can we stay here to-night?" inquired Fosco, as the dame came to the door and stood with arms akimbo, scanning our party with curious eye.

"Ye can try. I was the sapient rejoinder—a somewhat equivocal one—but belated travellers are not wont to be over nice.

We turned our animals into the yard, and bundled our traps into the front room—that served for sitting and dining and the like. The hostess had preceded us, and gave us greeting, leaning on the bar rail. She calmly examined our baggage, and, it was, and with a sigh of relief, remarked:

"Ye think got any yaller 'coliso, I see, and ye can stay. Ye may think it's curus, but no man which has a yaller volute can go up here. I'll tell you why this is: There was a Jew-like chap once came here, prospecting around, which and such a baggage; and kept on stayin' and stayin', which we didn't see no money or his'n'd day arter day. But, at last he findin' his valise very—which me and Cope passes often' heeled we thought it was all right. But, one day my man didn't come back any more, and when we came to open the valise, we found it nailed to the floor, empty, and no man with sich a heavy thing have we kept since."

"You are right in being cautious when such men are around. But where is your husband?" asked the Colonel.

"Don't ye fash yerself, I under. They call him Compasses 'cause one of his legs is a little bit regular. But you mustn't keep me palaverin', or you won't get nothing on prov'nder," and she bustled into the kitchen.

A fluffy-faced old lady as I ever looked upon—and she had safely passed the age when women are apt to become blotting-papers, to absorb all the milk of human kindness about them. Tall and spare, a plain print dress neatly put on, she had all possible dignity of carriage and demeanor.

A singular room we were occupying. At one end jutted from the wall a few shelves, on which was arranged a row of bottles. There were seven cans of oysters—always seven—having the marks of a late polishing. A small jar was labelled "Solace," if you rang it there came forth an empty shank. A cigar-box, of some fabled medicinal brand, hugged closer to this the company. An old Dutch pipe, hung up by the neck, and been strangling slowly for years. There was a remarkable print of the deluge upon one wall, where Noah's ark navigated among pink whales, that spouted raspberry soda-water; while Noah, with his select company, clad in navy uniforms, and bearing umbrellas, seemed to think the struggling creatures with all the effrontery of men who had paid their fare. Two paintings in imposers—"a run of panes," as Bat Shan christened them—strove to climb the rudder—but were pushed off by the gold-laced fir-lings. How do these Scriptural points get into such queer places? A half-dozen split-bottomed chairs, and two benches, that stood up against the wall, completed the furniture.

We had hardly completed a survey of our surroundings when we heard the blast of a horn, and close upon it a voice shouting, "S-l-a-s! S-l-a-s!"

In answer thereto there soon appeared at the door the lord of the manor, surnamed Compasses. He had an unmistakably staff-less—not a loose appendage, but a firm attachment to his body, like the limb of a tree—and the boot on his foot had all the close fitting symmetry of the skin of a baked apple upon the pulp thereof. The man, after gazing at us somewhat in surprise, pivoted into the room, entered the bar, and said, "Welcome, gentlemen. Take a drink?"

Though we were tolerably well acquainted with the spirits of the frontier, none of us were duly prepared for the pungency of the tipple, and hardly recovered our breath when the host reappeared, and hastily setting a table thereon our supper, of bacon, eggs and fritters, to which we did summary justice; and when we had finished, filled our pipes and sat under the porch in the warm evening, where we were soon joined "by the host and hostess, both as well provided with tobacco as ourselves.

An odd couple, truly! The man, a half-wasted form, with a yellow, shaggy beard, and an irregular Sudz Canal running through his sandy hair; the woman a trim, tidy body, with a soft velvet.

"We were much surprised, to find anyone living up here," remarked Fosco by way of beginning conversation.

"So am I, when I wake up in the morning," growled out Compasses.

"Now, Silas, don't say that," remonstrated his wife. "Yer hadn't orter be discontented here. We live well enough, and have no troubles. Yer hadn't orter do it."

"Well my life has been chock full of hadn't orters, anyway; and sometimes I've broken 'em, and sometimes not, and it don't seem to make no difference."

"It ain't never no good to buck against things, Silas. Providence is unsartin in his dispensatories, I know; and livin' is always a game of hope, and when we're young, is the prettiest part part of it, but I guess the Bible's true, and it all come out right."

"Well, for my part, I think Providence is a little mixed. It's no use talking of it, to me. I had a better chance as would ha' made a good sheep-man drowned down in Texas; but he got religion, and played on the big fiddle in church at first—which I called it the viol o' wrath—and the way he used to screech the wrath out o' that fiddle was a caution to frogs in the shiles. Then Rhoda took to preachin', and I went for to say, but somehow it's about the same thing, for them pious classes they gets up and preaches on their friends, and tell the Lord their shortcomings. And it as how we're all sinners, them fellers must kinder turn State's evidence. And after once got to preachin' the intended to convert me, but I did not convert so much as I might. You

No. 1,

EAST AND KENDUSKEAG BRIDGE

ON LOWER FLOOR.

A wild, uncouth place—a ragged, unshorn bit of Nature, in her most discordant mood. A narrow valley, fringed, as to its sides, with gnarled oaks that crouched in silence, and cottonwoods, whose leaves seemed glad to be hidden by their dusty coatings. Large boulders ran slow races down the hills, or gathered in sober groups around a stony chief; some gray and smitched with brittle moss; others broken, and trying to glisten in the sun. Even the birds deserted the cañon, at the foot of which the house stood; and, though sometimes peeping around the outlet, never ventured in. How the winter wind snarled up the ravine, buffeting everything, and drawing a cloud of dust like a jerky train! How the rain poured down, as if glad to wash out the landmarks, pelting and soaking, running new channels, and hollowing out the surface! Only the little, thread-like brook, that twisted down from the spring, laughed in the sunlight, flashing back upon the clinging weeds that courtesied to the bright bubbles on their rapid course. At the fence the brook crept wider, and moistened the flowers and vegetables that were scattered about the gardens—the pride and care of Aunt Clepsy, and the solace of her heart.

Hunting all day among the hills, wearied with fruitless sport, we came unexpectedly upon these signs of life, and, urging our horses, pushed on to the dwelling.

"Can we stay here to-night?" inquired Fosco, as the dame came to the door and stood with arms akimbo, scanning our party with curious eye.

"Ye can try," was the sapient rejoinder—a somewhat equivocal one—but belated travelers are not wont to be over nice.

We turned our animals into the yard, and bundled our traps into the front room—that served for sitting, and dining, and the bar. The hostess had preceded us and gave us greeting, leaning on the bar rail. She coolly examined our baggage, such as it was, and with a sigh of relief, remarked:

"Ye ain't got any yaller volise, I see; and ye can stay. Ye may think it curus, but no inan which has a yaller volice can tie up here. I'll tell you why, thistis. There was a Northlike chap most came here, prospecting around, which had sich a baggage; and kept on stayin' and stayin', which we didn't see no money or thin's day arter day. But he was found his volise heavy—which me and Compasses often hefted, we thought it was all right. But, one day my man didn't come back any more; and when we came to open the volise, we found it nailed to the floor, empty; and no man with sich a heavy thing have we kept since."

"You are right in being cautious when such men are around. But where is your husband?" asked the Colonel.

"Down in the field, yonder. They call him Compasses, 'cause one of his legs is a little irregular. But you mustn't keep the palavrin', or you won't get nothing or provinder," and she bustled into the kitchen.

A kindly-faced old lady "as I ever looked upon" and who had safely passed the age when women are apt to become plotting-papers, to absorb all the talk of human kindness about them. Tall and spare, a plain print-gown neatly put on, she had all possible dignity of carriage and demeanor.

A singular room we were occupying. At one end littred from the wall, a few shelves, on which was arranged a row of bottles. There were seven cans of oysters—always seven—having the marks of a daily polishing. A small jar was labelled "Solace;" if you rung it there came forth an empty sound. A cigar box, of some faded medieval brand, hugged closer to this for company. An old Dutch pipe, hung up by the neck, had been strangling slowly for years. There was a remarkable print of the deluge upon one wall, where a purple ark, navigated among pink whales, that spouted raspberry soda-water; white Noah, with his select company, clad in navy uniforms, and bearing umbrellas, seemed to chaff the struggling creatures with, all the efficiency of men who had paid their fare. Two panting swimmers—"a pair of pants," as Barkham christened them—strove to climb the rudder—but were pushed off by the gold-faced hirelings. How do these Scriptural prints get into such queer places? A half-dozen well whittled chairs, and two benches, that slicked up against the wall, completed the furniture.

We had hardly completed a survey of our surroundings when we heard the blast of a horn, and close upon it a voice shouting, "S-l-i-a-s! S-i-l-a-s!"

In answer thereto there soon appeared at the door the lord of the manor, surnamed Compasses. He had an unmistakably stiff leg—not a loose appendage, but a firm attachment to his body, like the limb of a tree—and the boot on his foot had all the close fitting symmetry of the skin of a baked apple upon the pulp thereof. The man, after gazing at us somewhat in surprise, pivoted into the room, entered the bar, and said, "Welcome, gentlemen! Take a drink?"

Though we were tolerably well acquainted with the spirits of the frontier, most of us were fully prepared for the pungency of the tipple, and hardly recovered our breath when the lady reappeared, and hastily setting a table, fell thereon our supper, of bacon, eggs and flapjacks, to which we did summary justice; and when we had finished, filled our pipes and sat under the porch in the warm evening, where we were soon joined by the host and hostess, both as well provided with tobacco as ourselves.

An odd couple, truly! The man, a half-wasted form, with a yellow, shaggy beard, and an irregular Suez Canal running through his sandy hair; the woman a trim, neat body, with a soft voice.

"We were much surprised to find anyone living up here," remarked Fosco, by way of beginning conversation.

"So am I, when I wake up in the morning," growled out Compasses.

"Now, Silas, don't say that," remonstrated his wife. "Ye hadn't orter be discontented here. We live well enough, and have no trouble. Ye hadn't orter do it."

"Wall, my life has been chock full of hadn't orters, anyway; and sometimes I've broken 'em, and sometimes not, and it don't seem to make no difference."

"It don't never no good to back again things, Silas. Providence is unsartin in his dispensations, I know; and Divil is always a game p'rhaps; and when we're young, is the p'rhapsess part part of it, but I guess the Bible's true, and it'll all come out right."

"Wall, for my part, I think Providence is a little mixed. It's no use talking of it to me. That's brother-in-law's work he made a good sheep-man down in Texas, but he got religion, and played on the big fiddle in church at first—which I called it the viol of wrath—and the way he used to squeak the wrath out of that fiddle was a caution to frogs in the sluice. Then Enos took to preachin', peaches; I went for to say, but somehow it's about the extra thing, for their pious cusses they gets up and peaches on their friends, and tell the Lord their shortcomings. And as how we're all sinners, them fellers must kinder turn State's evidence. And after Enos got to preachin', he stood to, can't say he, but I did not convert so much as I might. You see, I'm like one worm, getten down by pison. And it seems to run in families. There was Mary Flint, our town; had a rattle of seven sons, and one after another took to drinkin', and died.—I think that if the men as makes laws would license drinkin' and gamblin' places and let people do them openly, there couldn't be so many drunkards. Cos folks always hankers after what they are forbidden to get. Are ye all from San Francisco?"

All but one of us who is from China.

"Didn't see you say from China. I would, if he hasn't ever met my son there—ain't China contiguous to Rooshia?"

"No very; a great many miles between them."

Stanched, by Moses! Here interrupted the old man. "Look-a-here, Cleps, don't never say nothin' more to me about luck. This yer gen'leman has had two clutches of luck, without catchin breath. I do believe as how that recording angel of yourn has never scratched nothing but stitches agin my name. I've had enough of this game."

Compasses rose from the table, and refilled his pipe, and seemed to be trying to relieve his mind by vicious puffs at it.

"Gentlemen, ever since Gold-hornèd me, everything has pottered out. First, I was cleaned out by the drought in Texas—Then I was captain of a ferry, over Snake-river-ferry, and was doin' well, when the cusses put up a job on me as bust the side light. Then I guessed I'd keep a bizness of ferries on each side of the river, and pick up a big job at their funerals; to hold 'em down, and wade across. That let me out on navigation. And hence I've been here, my stock is always running away, and my ricks burnin' down, till I'm even a most worn out."

"You must have been rather tried by all these things," ventured Fosco.

"You may say that boldly, sir. Tried is a good word. I've been sorry in the frying pan, and I'm skimmin's."

"Don't you remember Silas, of that story of Job, which was the unfortunatest man in the Scriptur?"

"Yes, it does; and I'm very much like Job, only I'm richer. Well, it's getting nigh on to bedtime, and I'll say good night."

GIRARD, Pa., March 13, 1868.

BOSTON COSMOPOLITAN.—I deem it my official duty to inform you of Helmbold's Extract Buchu, the beneficial effects of which in the case of one of my parishioners is so remarkable as to call for more than a passing notice. For many years this individual has been afflicted with a severe kidney and bladder complaint, and tried almost every remedy without obtaining relief, until he was induced to try your Extract Buchu, which he procured of your agent in this place. He had taken but little faith in the apparently unofficial recommendations of Helmbold's Extract Buchu, but to the surprise of himself, his family and friends, he commenced improving from the first day he began its use, and in the space of two months, although an infirm old man, he was able to walk erect, and to transact his business with promptness and energy. Exercising after the manner of a well man, he has ever since enjoyed perfect health. I thought it publicly to record this fact, as also to let those who know the value of Helmbold's Extract Buchu, know that it is worthy of their confidence. Yours, gratefully,
